Listen folks, the Internet is "all grewed up now". Yes in the early years as the Internet was just starting to be used people would recreationally use it for sharing music files and curiously follow blogs and forums and get on chat rooms and the like. Gradually they started using it for news media and then came the dawning of the social networks. And there is no question the Internet is going to continue to become more and more mainstream.

But know this. Today's Internet and the Internet of the future is pedal to the metal! People are demanding video with audio! The static pages are taking a back seat in the back row. There was a time when people listened to the radio all the time for entertainment until this thing called television came along. It didn't take long through the 1950's and on until TV took over. By the late 1970's and early 1980's even the music industry went full bore into using and marketing video.

Today even Facebook, Twitter, and MySpace are flooded with people using video in their social interaction! It is so prevalent and a mainstay on the Internet that technology is standardized to the point that over 99% of visitors can view a video commercial. And the demand, interest, and attraction is only growing!
